

JOHNS HOPKINS ONSITE CLINICS

World class health care...at work™

As an employer, you know the many advantages of a healthy workforce.

You also know the challenges of maintaining productivity when your employees are not at work because they are ill. Or they're at work, but poor health is limiting their productivity.

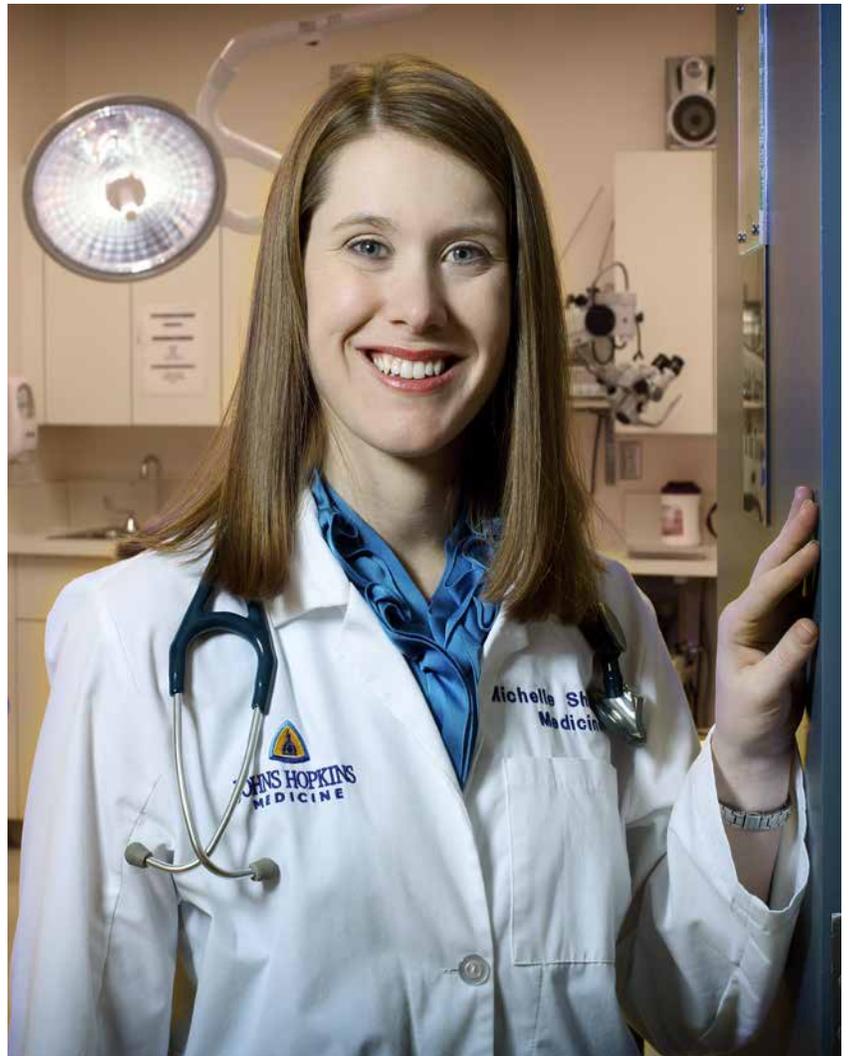

Johns Hopkins Onsite Clinics are right for businesses in various industries with workforces of various sizes.

Johns Hopkins' onsite and near-site clinics focus on prevention and offer chronic care management and treatment of occupational injuries. They also include a comprehensive package of key services, which are tailored to your company's unique health care needs and objectives.

Because of their demonstrated value, onsite clinics were utilized in 2016 by more than 40 percent of U.S. employers with 500+ employees.

An onsite clinic is convenient for both employers and employees: you both can realize savings on medical costs; you keep your workforce on the job and productive, and your employees can significantly reduce their out-of-pocket medical expenses, transportation costs, and work-time lost due to off-site doctor's appointments.

An onsite clinic allows employees (and for some employers their dependents) to be treated promptly for minor conditions before they become chronic conditions. And through comprehensive clinical programs, information and educational events, many serious chronic physical and mental conditions—such as obesity, diabetes, stress, depression and substance abuse—can be diagnosed sooner or even prevented.
